A drug dealer who filmed himself waving a knife and saying 'I don't even care about the feds bruv' on Snapchat in a London nightclub has been sentenced to six years and four months in prison.

Abel Buafo, 23, from Lambeth, was caught out after detectives saw a 'selfie style' video he made in the nightclub on Silver Street, Enfield in December 2019.

He was sentenced at Inner London Crown Court on Friday, 17 September, after pleading guilty to possession of and intent to supply Class A drugs and possession of a knife.

Buafo's incriminating Snapchat videos showed him dancing and singing while waving a "Rambo" knife, and shouting that he has his "blicky at the rave". Blicky is a slang term for knife.

In one of the videos, he said "I've got my blicky on me". His friend tells him to "shhh", to which he replies, "I don't even care about the feds bruv, on my mum's life".

When officers forced entry to Buafó's home in February 2020, he hurriedly attempted to flush a large amount of a chemical used to cut crack cocaine down the sink.

Officers also found MDMA and cannabis, scales and bags for drugs, and over £1,200 in counterfeit cash.
